When voluntary and free acts turn into habits, they are accomplished without effort; therefore, the energy consumed by these acts is liberated and it becomes possible to utilize it in other matters. The Saints' progress towards perfection is due to the increase and reinforcement of habits.

By acquiring habits, the body ceases to be heavy and confusing, because we choose to make of it a tool of creation, and to submit it to the mind's project.

To manage life issues, habits have more ability than the maxims, because the habit which is a live maxim has turned into an instinct, and a body. Reforming these maxims is not a big issue; it is like changing the title of the book. Whereas, acquiring new habits is all what is needed, because we would be reaching life in its core. Life is nothing but a texture of habits.
