Third Subject: Text

For consciousness to be able to imagine, it must intrinsically escape from the world. It must be able in itself to have a set back position towards the world. In one word, it must be free. [...]

Imagination is not an empirical superadded ability of consciousness; it is the whole of consciousness as it realizes its freedom. Each realistic and concrete state of consciousness in the world promotes imagination as long as it always presents itself to go beyond reality. And this does not mean that all consciousness of reality is transformed into imaginative, since consciousness is always conscious "in situation" because it is always free, there is always, and at every moment, for it a real possibility of producing what is unrealistic.

Sartre
