

Iman Khalil received her PhD in Didactics from the University of Paris-Diderot in 1995. She is presently the Head of the Educational Studies and Research Center at the Lebanese University's Faculty of Education where she served as the editor of the journal "Recherches Pédagogiques". She also represents the Faculty in the General Education Curriculum Development's Planning Committee at the Center for Educational Research and Development. Since 2018, Iman Khalil has also been a member of the scientific council of the Doctoral School of Letters, Humanities and Social Sciences, as well as the Development and Research Bureau at the Lebanese University. Furthermore, since 2020, she has represented the Lebanese University in the Association of Universities of Lebanon's Higher Education Policy Committee. Iman Khalil has led multiple research projects in Lebanon and in partnership with international institutions. She represented the General Directorate of Higher Education in several national and international research projects. She also participated in the specialized commissions of the Ministry of Education and Higher Education in Lebanon. Iman Khalil has over 15 years of experience supervising PhD and master's research, in addition to her 28 years of teaching experience and a substantial publication record.